I am all for everyone having a choice to decide whether or not they want to wear a mask. There are situations I am understanding of the requirements to wear one. That said, they have been a barrier of interaction with others. They have become a symbol of fear. Causing strangers who would be friendly and social on a regular occasion just nod and give a little wave. Smiles are contagious spreading happiness they need to be seen and expressed. Depression and anxiety for myself, friends, and many others all around us has gone sky high. I am a social person, human beings are generally a social animal. Three weeks ago I had an anxiety attack in public due to a medical situation with me son and couldn't breathe, if I hadn't pulled my mask off I would have passed out. I am otherwise a healthy adult with common sense. If I am sick I stay home. If I come into direct contact with someone who has been positive get tested and wait for results. We need to get back to living our lives and do so with the knowledge that this isn't going away anytime soon.
