The state of Maryland — a highly masked and vaccinated population by comparison— has done no better at containing the spread of the virus than states with much lower masking and vaccination rates. The previous mask mandates have resulted in no demonstrable reduction in cases compared to locales without mandates. Data from around the world proves time and time again that mask mandates provide no benefit whatsoever in containing the spread. And yet here we are, once again rehashing the same old idea of imposing the same old mandates. However, this time we are expected to believe that it will actually work? Is this not the colloquial definition of insanity? Furthermore, this comes in the face of recent admissions from the “scientists” and “experts” indicating that masks do not work. More and more people are suffering, growing weary of constantly being held personally responsible for stopping the spread of an unleashed microorganism they have no hope of containing. The relentless imposition of failed methods forced upon the masses is futile and it is taking its toll. It has only succeeded in turning us all against each other. And that is the greatest tragedy of all.
