"Watch out for dragons!", Mother Mosquito warns her daughters as they fly off to find dinner. A single dragonfly may eat hundreds of mosquitoes a day. Are your children and grandchildren able to identify a dragonfly? Dragonflies are just one tiny part of our threatened Bryan's Road sub-area ecosystem of vital springs and streams running from deep woods on their way to feed beaver meadows and marshes along Mattawoman and Pomonkey Creeks which in turn feed the Potomac and ultimately the Chesapeake Bay. Green spaces aren't just for Nature. Mankind has proven benefits too, gaining better mental health, lowering stress and anxiety. As a kid I'd grab my bike when I got home to my subdivision to ride to the woods to play in a stream. Kids today come home to their subdivisions to play in a screen. Please save our green space. Find another home for this subdivision!
