I was recently made aware that the bodies of enslaved persons have been found on the property where my home was built in the Stonehaven community of White Plains. Surely the county keeps record of land assessments and property evaluations before granting builders to build mass developments on potential burial sites. What happened in this specific instance and how was Lennar given the OK to build mass communities here without properly disclosing this information to the homebuyer? What are the county's plans on communicating this information to the public? And importantly how does the county plan to rectify this deplorable issue?
