I already sent these same comments and noticed they went to the Planning Commission and not the BOCC so I'm resending. Not trying to spam anyone. The Board of County Commissioners tasks PGM and the Planning Commission to allow more residential development by way of allowing more school seats for an already overly-crowded public school system. Yet, the Board of Education, voted in by the citizens of Charles County, are not included in the process. The BOE is where the buck stops when parents complain about redistricting, kids eating lunch at 10:30 am and having to be sequestered in trailers with no access to bathrooms or security. How could any decision be rendered without the input of those who know the school system best? Appoint a task force and include the BOE; it only makes sense.
